Location & Local Information

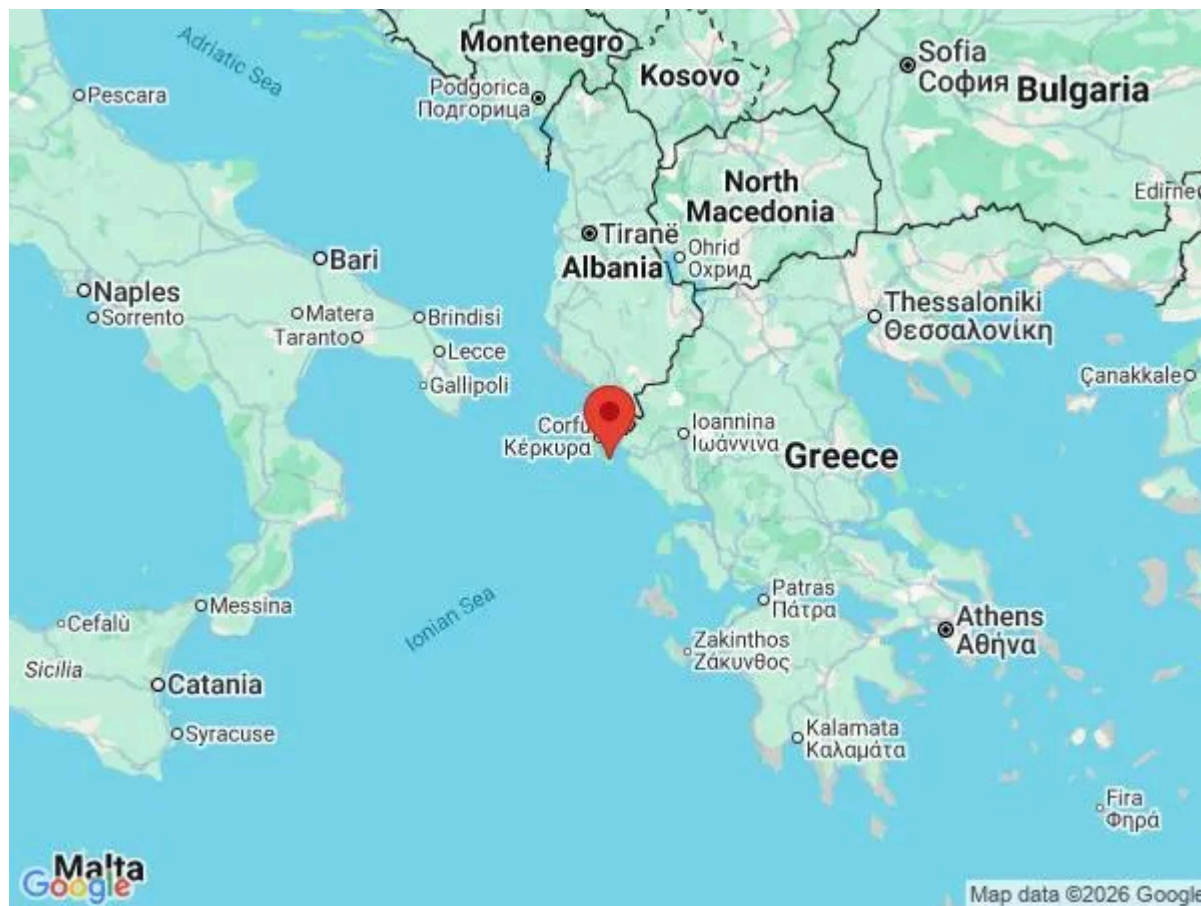

If you're looking for a taste of the real Corfu, Lefkimmi is a good place to start. This small southern town hasn't been overdeveloped with tourists in mind, but you will find the things you need. There are several restaurants within a short walk of each other, and it's only a few minutes' drive to the nearest beaches, Alikes and Bouka Beach among them.

You will find quaint villages and areas of natural beauty all over the island, and there are plenty more beaches along the way. Several are ranked among the best in Greece. Paleokastritsa, Myrtilotissa and Kavos are all on the list, the latter being the most popular beach in the south of the island. It's only a 15-minute drive from Lefkimmi and offers beach bars and sporting activities.

Head up to Corfu Town and experience the island's enchanting capital. Be sure to stop by the Spianada – it's a spot everyone knows. The landscaped gardens and bandstand of this seafront square give it a little grandeur, something it shares with its neighbour, the Liston. This covered gallery of café terraces is the place to be in Corfu. You should definitely treat yourself to a visit while you're in town. The Spianada sometimes hosts live music performances and entertainment too.

Make some time to see the nearby Old Fortress – it will reward you with some wonderful views once you have made the considerable climb to the top. Another of Corfu's most notable buildings is the 19th-century Palace of St Michael and St George, originally built as the residence of the British High Commissioner during a period of British rule. If heritage is your thing, a tour of the palace is a must. The excellent Museum of Asian Art now occupies part of the building and, after almost 100 years in existence, has around 15,000 intriguing pieces in its collection.

Corfu has numerous churches, some of which have interesting art collections of their own, like the Byzantine Church of St Jason & St Sospater. The church with the red dome you may spot is Saint Spyridon's Church, where the Corfu's patron saint was laid to rest – it's notable for its painted ceiling and the tallest bell tower on the island. You can see the work of local artists down the centuries at the Municipal Gallery, also found at the Palace of St Michael and St George, while the Archaeological Museum is the place if you want to go back even further in time.

The Campiello, as the medieval quarter of the town is known, is part of a UNESCO World Heritage Site. It's as jumbled and eclectic as you would hope it to be, with narrow streets and hidden squares, feeling like a little bit of Italy on a Greek island.
