The Grade II-listed French House is also a must-visit. This pub holds its flame for its rich historical past, having served as Charles de Gaulle's workplace during World War II. It was also frequented by the likes of Dylan Thomas and Francis Bacon, while Fergus Henderson managed the upstairs dining room before embarking on his venture at St John. The interiors ooze a delightful Gallic charm. Despite its petite size, the French House draws a lively crowd, making it one of the most fascinating gems of Soho.
