Location & Local Information

Kalkan is a coastal town on Turkey's southwestern Mediterranean coast, located in Antalya Province along what is often referred to as the Turquoise Coast. The town is built on a hillside that slopes down towards a small harbour, with many whitewashed houses and narrow streets forming the older part of the settlement. Around the harbour and old town area there are a number of restaurants, shops and cafés, many of which have rooftop terraces with views across the bay. Kalkan developed from a small fishing village and has gradually grown into a tourism destination, while still retaining a relatively compact town centre.

The wider area around Kalkan includes a varied coastline, clear Mediterranean waters and several sites of historical interest. Ancient Lycian cities such as Patara, Xanthos and Letoon are located within driving distance, and Kaputaş Beach sits along the coastal road between Kalkan and Kaş. The region also provides opportunities for activities such as boat trips, swimming, diving and walking sections of the Lycian Way, a long-distance hiking route that runs along the coast.

Kalamar is a residential area situated just east of Kalkan's town centre, overlooking Kalamar Bay. It is primarily made up of villas and small apartment complexes, many of which are positioned on the hillside above the bay. The area has several beach clubs that provide access to the sea, along with facilities such as sunbathing platforms, swimming areas and casual dining.

Due to its location slightly outside the centre of Kalkan, Kalamar generally has a quieter atmosphere while remaining within a short distance of the town's harbour, restaurants and shops. Many properties in the area face towards the bay and have open sea views, particularly from higher elevations. The area is often chosen by visitors who prefer a residential setting close to, but not directly within, the main town.
