Location & Local Information

Kokkino Horio is a traditional village in the Apokoronas region of Chania, Crete, offering a peaceful setting with views across Souda Bay and the Aegean Sea. Characterised by its narrow streets, whitewashed homes, and relaxed pace of life, the village provides an opportunity to experience a more authentic side of the island away from the larger tourist resorts. Its elevated position makes it a popular spot for enjoying the surrounding countryside and coastal scenery.

The village has a long history, with influences from both the Venetian and Ottoman periods still visible in the local architecture and nearby landmarks. One of the area's notable attractions is the historic Venetian fortress overlooking the region, while Kokkino Horio is also known for its traditional glassblowing workshop, where visitors can watch skilled artisans at work and purchase locally made pieces.

Kokkino Horio is well placed for exploring western Crete. Several walking and hiking routes pass through the surrounding hills, offering views of olive groves, rugged landscapes, and the coastline. Nearby beaches, including Almyrida and Koutalas, are within a short drive and provide opportunities for swimming, snorkelling, and relaxing by the sea.

The village is also home to a selection of family-run tavernas and cafés serving traditional Cretan dishes prepared with locally sourced ingredients. Combining a tranquil atmosphere, scenic surroundings, and easy access to both the coast and the countryside, Kokkino Horio is a convenient base for visitors looking to discover the natural beauty and cultural heritage of the Chania region.
