Location & Local Information

The traditional village of Drakona lies in the countryside of western Crete, around 4–5 km south of the coastal town of Kolymvari. Set among olive groves and gently rising hills, it is a small rural settlement with a distinctly local character, offering a quieter setting than the busier resorts along the north coast.

The surrounding area is largely agricultural, with olive cultivation playing an important role in the landscape. Nearby villages such as Vouves and Spilia add to the area's traditional feel, while the wider Kolymvari region is known for its historic churches and longstanding connection with farming and local produce. The Monumental Olive Tree of Vouves, considered one of the world's oldest olive trees, is also close by.

For everyday amenities and access to the coast, Kolymvari is a short drive away. The town has shops, cafés and tavernas, as well as a small fishing harbour and a long pebble beach. Although tourism is established here, Kolymvari retains the atmosphere of a working coastal town and is generally quieter than the larger resorts further east towards Chania.

Drakona is also well placed for exploring western Crete by car. Chania lies to the east, while the villages and countryside around Kolymvari provide opportunities for walking, visiting traditional settlements and exploring local churches and historic sites. The location therefore combines a rural village setting with relatively straightforward access to the coast and the wider Chania region. The villa also provides an excellent base for exploring some of Crete's most iconic destinations, including Balos Lagoon, Falassarna Beach, Elafonissi Beach, and the historic monasteries of the region.
