Location & Local Information

The island of Korčula is so picturesque it's a wonder that it's not overrun with visitors. The beautiful Old Town of Korčula sits pretty amongst olive groves, vineyards and pine forests on the island's north-eastern side, looking out towards the Pelješac peninsula.

As one of the Adriatic's more populated islands, Korčula is well-prepared for the visitors it receives, many of whom appreciate its laid-back vibe and natural beauty.

The main town is a lovely place to wander, with street markets, pavement cafés and old buildings to admire. Look out for St Mark's Cathedral and the imposing Revelin Tower which once marked the entrance to the walled city. The view, looking out over the harbour, is a charming one.

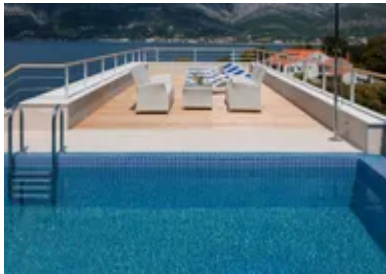

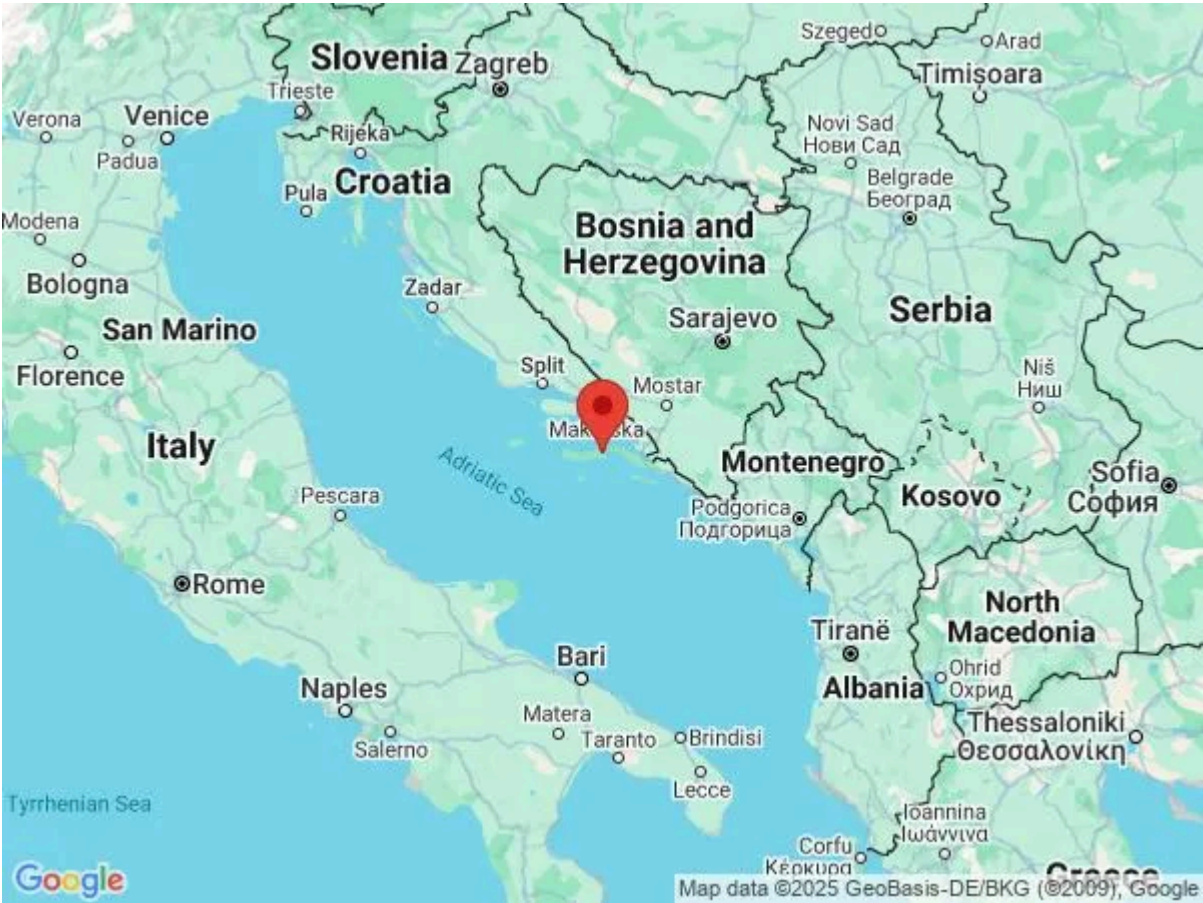

Around 15km from the town of Korčula, the lovely Pupnatska Luca beach is also worth a visit; aside from chilling out in the sun, its crystal blue waters are great for swimming and snorkelling. Elsewhere on the island, you can try white-water rafting in Blato, or diving in Vela Luka.

You may find some visitor attractions based around Marco Polo's (possibly tenuous) connection to Korčula, as he is something of an unofficial mascot for the island. However, there are many more authentic experiences to be had on the island.

With galleries, winery tours and many beautiful villages to see, avoid the tourist traps and keep it real. For an unforgettable taste of the true Korčula, head to Vela Luka and take a boat trip to Proizd island, just off the west coast – a naturally stunning spot you won't want to miss.
